THE SUN.

Another good audience braved the weather last night to hear Professor Proctor's second lecture at the Seventh-Street Christian church. His subject was "The Sun," and he addressed himself to it with the ardor of one who felt that he had a theme grand enough to enlist all his powers, comprehensive and difficult enough to demand the closest and most consecutive treatment, and yet rich and sublime enough to reward every step of the investigation.

He began with the usual statements as to the distance of the sun, and gave some of the familiar illustrations by which we may seek to realize that distance. Then he touched upon the great size and mass and consequent strength of this giant ruler of the solar system, holding each of the planets in its ap-olding each of the planets in its ap-ointed path by that ever-mysterious ower which all matter has to attract all other matter. Next he told rapidly but succinctly of the light and heat of this "almoner of the Almighty." He stated that each square inch of the sun's surface gives as much light as 200 electric lights, and as there light as 200 electric lights, and as there are so many square inches on the sun (11,700 times as many as on the earth) its brightness would equal that of so many times so many electric lights. So for its heat, equal, according to Herschel, to that produced by burning twelve thousand millions of millions of tens of best coal per second. Whence comes this heat? If, as Croll calculates, it has been giving out heat to the earth, as it is now doing, for at least ten millions of years, from what source has it drawn this seem-ingly boundless supply? The answer that science gives is that this heat has come from the continued contraction of its volume. But Helmholtz has shown that this contraction must have gone be youd the present size of the sun as we see it; hence we must believe, and the lecturer insisted much on this point, within the surface—the varying, fluctuating, irregularly-moving surface-tha

that the real globe of the sun

Soon the lecturer glided into the great questior—the much-mooted and still-disputed question that is the very key to nearly all our knowledge of the sun's physical condition—namely, "What are the sun spots?" There are many theories as to these most mysterious chasms in the sun's surface; and Prolike this: The spots originate in erap-tions from the interior of the suneruptions of which our volcanoes may give an extremely faint idea; then when the eruption gradually ceases the cloud matter, columns of which we mell" as Lecchi says, to fill up the huge chasm. This view, Mr. Proctor seems to think, will account for all the varied phenomena which a spot ordinarily manifests, from its regular beginning to its irregular breaking up and disappearance.

He discussed also at some length the "red flames" that show themselves in eclipses, and which astronomers have recently learned to see even in full sunlight, rising up thousands of miles al! around the border of the sun. He holds the view that gaseous matter could not be so projected in straight columns through the sun's atmosphere; but that what we see are "trails" or "tracks" f solid meteoric matter thrown out from the sun, with such velocity that it can never return to the sun again, but goes off to swell the numbers of meteors that fill the interstellar spaces. As our sun is, so are all the millions on millions of stars that fill infinite space : each of these may be likewise projecting meteoric matter into the spaces around, and from this source come the meteors that nightly gleam athwart our sky. We are not sure that this view of Professor Proctor's is altogether or-thodox, but there can be no question of the interest and forcefulness of his presentation of it.

Along with this came a well-illus-trated and most engrossing discussion of the "Corona," which the Professor said could not possibly be of the na-ture of an atmosphere; and also of the wonderful Zodiacal light, which he believed to be equal in ex-tent to the whole solar system. Then, in conclusion, he suggested that if every star that gleams on high is such in grandeur and power as this our sun, how mean and contemptible seems man! And yet all this may but show that in the Maker's eyes "mere matter is cheap," while a single mind and heart may in His scales outweigh them all.

The lecture commanded the undivided attention of the audience and won the most unreserved commendation of all.

At midnight on Sunday Engineer J. Thomas told his fireman to get off at Columbus, Ind., on the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis Railway, and wait while he went about half a mile shead and took water. The loconotive did not return, and the fireman learning at the tank that it had run past without stopping, raised the alarm and caused an engine to be sent in pursuit. After going twelve miles north they were flagged by the engineer of the wild engine, who told them his engine had run out of water. He had been working without sleep on account of a snow blockade for two nights, and had run his engine while sound asleep.
